Fifth Sprint - Jonathan Svantesson

This week I have mostly been doing some small fixing, for example making sure that we got a good ratio of different kinds of fish, basically making the "question-fish" appear less often than the other fish. The hook is also working completely now, thanks to some few changes in the code.

I am rather pleased with how good everything is going in the group, everybody contributes in their own way and we have throughout the weeks made good progress in all areas, without any major complications. I think the big reason for this is the overall openness between us, as colleagues in the group.

My personal view is that I have learned a lot about the way of working with scrum, with a new library and with new people. This whole experience will be useful for me and for my education progress.
